PROJECT MANAGEMENT

THE BETTER WAY TO MANAGE YOUR CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS.

WITHOUT ENTERPRISE PROJECT MANAGEMENT

No Integration

Using multiple software such as Excel and Outlook, combined with a standalone project management system tends to leave companies disjointed and disorganized. With information spread out across multiple systems, the risk of data loss, duplicate entries, and double-billing is heightened.

Lack of Document Tracking

With documents stored throughout numerous software, and on multiple computer systems, the probability of misplaced documents is greatly increased. Manual processes such as RFIs, job costing and daily logs are difficult to track and manage as they are susceptible to loss or incorrect entry.

Limited Control

A true project management software should provide construction businesses with the ability to fully manage their projects. However, without such a solution in place, control is difficult to attain. Issues such as overlooked approvals, double payments and delayed or missed billings can ultimately lead to lost revenue.

Scheduling Inconsistencies

With the inability to view schedules in real-time, the risk of scheduling errors increases. If a project schedule is not updated manually throughout the day, important details may fall through the cracks. This can result in project delays or conflicts, which is not only unproductive and inefficient, but also costly as well.

Poor Tracking

Without a fully integrated, real-time project scheduling software solution, gaining a complete view of any project can be difficult. Determining which phase of a specific project is profitable or unprofitable is challenging, which reduces the overall ability to make accurate decisions regarding how to proceed with the project going forward.
